

CDM 215 Overview

Aims

This course will provide delegates with the necessary foundation knowledge and general understanding of the Regulations to discharge their relevant responsibilities on most projects. For larger or more complex projects additional courses are available for organisations who will regularly undertake the role of either appointed Principal Designer or Principal Contractor.

Who Attends

This course is intended for any person who is involved in construction projects that attract legal duties and responsibilities under CDM 2015.

Course Content

- The legal framework for health, safety and welfare as applied to GB.
- The need for a set of health, safety and welfare regulations dedicated to the construction industry.
- A Brief account and rationale of the development of the regulations from their origins found in the European Directive from 1992, through two previous sets of Regulations (1994 & 2007) and arriving at CDM 2015 (remember the Directive has not changed!).
- The imposition and management structure to be applied to relevant projects.
- Definitions including project, construction work, structure and notification.
- Duties of a client, principal designer, designer, principal contractor and contractor.
- The requirements and responsibilities for the pre construction information.
- The content and development of the construction phase plan as a management tool.
- The content, purpose and construction of the health and safety file for future use.
- The course will include short syndicate exercises and require delegate participation

Course Duration
